President Morales also took the opportunity to address concerns in the United States regarding Bolivian policies on investment, anti-narcotics, and democracy. In meetings, speeches and contacts with media the President sought to counteract negative images regarding Bolivia, explain his policies, and secure support for open and fluid relations with Bolivia, and address specific aspects of US-Bolivia relations (e.g., extension to the trade preferences enjoyed under the ATPDEA, investment policies, and possible funding through the Millennium Challenge Corporation). In meetings with community leaders from the United States, President Morales sought to promote “people to people” connections between Bolivia and the United States, and to identify areas of common interest.

A meeting was held with former Presidents Carter and Clinton, during which President Morales presented information on political and social processes in Bolivia and responded to questions posed on Bolivia and relations with the United States.
